Development NGOs call for a vote for justice

MEP candidates urged to tackle global poverty

Irish overseas development agencies will officially launch their vision of how Irish MEPs can make a difference for the world's poorest people at the offices of the European Parliament in Dublin on Friday morning.

Drawing inspiration from Ireland's first rugby Grand Slam win in 61 years - and Leinster seeking their first Heineken Cup win - development agencies and their supporters are calling for European candidates to line out for development and tackle global poverty.

"It is extremely important that we choose Irish representatives that will use their influence in Brussels to build a Europe that shows solidarity with the world's poorest people," said Helen Keogh, chairperson of Dóchas, the network of Ireland's development NGOs.

After similar events in Maynooth and Cork this week, overseas development NGOs will hold a public panel debate in Dublin on Friday morning (10am -12pm), asking candidates in the constituency to set out what they will do about overseas development if elected.

Dóchas will launch a policy briefing, There's Power in the Parliament, after a photo call with candidates in the Dublin constituency. That briefing highlights 10 ways that soon-to-be elected Irish MEPs can ensure Ireland leads the fight in Europe for a fairer world.

While the European elections have not yet begun to dominate the headlines, Irish citizens do engage very actively with EU issues. Statistics released by the European Parliament show that Irish residents are among the most active EU citizens raising issues with their European representatives. Among the subjects most frequently raised by Irish people are human rights, EU foreign policy, trade policy, overseas aid and the fight against all forms of discrimination.

"The choices we will make on 5 June and the manner in which those Irish MEPs work in Brussels will have an enormous influence not just Ireland and Europe, but on the global community", Ms Keogh said.
